Persuasive Writing

Persuasive writing is a text in which the author tries to convince the reader of their point of view.

Features:

- a title that shows what the text is about. Often uses “How....” or “Why....”.
- an opening paragraph that introduces the topic or idea
- cause and effect conjunctions logically link points to supporting details
- the final paragraph links back to the opening
- only one side of the topic is discussed
- each point is elaborated upon with detail and examples
- rhetorical questions are used
- strong and emotive adjectives challenge the reader to disagree
- opinion presented as facts
- ambiguous phrases e.g., probably, almost certainly
- present tense verbs

Features:

- use a clear voice
- consider volume
- use feeling and expression
- use movement and gestures
- consider the speed of delivery
- make eye contact with the audience
- use different voices
- speak confidently
- follow a rhythm if required

Bullet Points

Bullet points are used for making lists. You could use them to organise a set of questions, a list of nouns or a checklist of things to do.

If your bullet point is a full sentence, use capital letters and full stops.

If your bullet point is part of a list of nouns, you can separate them with a semi-colon.

Inference

When reading, we use lots of different skills. One of these is being able to deduct and infer based on evidence from the text.

For example, if a child was ‘grinning from ear to ear’ and ‘whooping loudly’ we can infer that they are happy even though it isn’t stated.
